

Our project

There is a growing trend around the world to promote social responsibility and ethical behaviour in business organisations. It is strongly connected with growing pressure on more fair trade relations between companies from Global North and Global South.

The objective

At a time when new members of European Union begin an accelerated process of development, it is important to educate many of their future leaders with development ideas and policies taking into account current needs, challenges and trends.

Our project deals with issues such as corporate social responsibility, global education, north-south trade relations, responsibility of managers and ethical aspects of decision making process.

Within the 'Homoresponsabilis in the Globalized World' project we intend to transfer a successful simulation game developed by Groupe One (Belgium) which is one of the core partners in the project. The transfer will be done to Poland, Bulgaria and Austria.

The game

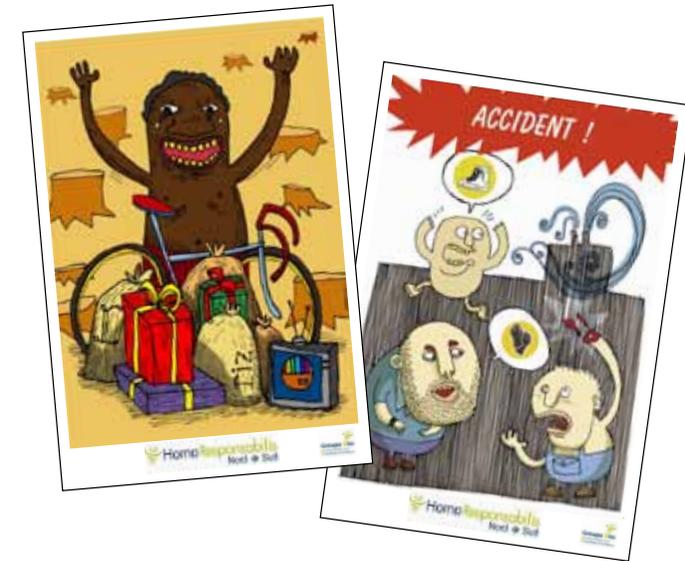

The game Homoresponsabilis North South was created by Groupe One in 2007. It relies on interaction between different teams playing the role of companies active on the international market for tropical timber.

Active pedagogy

The Game uses active pedagogy to enable students to develop their thinking and entrepreneurial skills, and obtain a better understanding of globalization, international trade, standards and sustainable development.

Expected outcomes

- stronger promotion of global and development education also in new EU countries;
- mobilisation of greater public support for establishing fairer relations between developed and developing countries;
- reaching young people, teachers and other actors;
- in the longer term – benefits for companies and, ultimately, for the people of the South (improvements in working conditions and development).

Trainings

Teachers, VET providers, trainers and facilitators:
We offer two-day training courses for you!

School workshops

Our project is targeting students below tertiary level because many of them will become future owners and managers of SMEs.
We offer half-day and one-day courses for schools for you!
